CREATURE GUIDE

BROKEN URTHE

CREATURE GUIDE

The Broken Urthe rules covers all you need to create your own creatures for characters to encounter. This is encouraged for you as a Storyteller, to make some of these on your own. Make your Urthe unique and players guessing at what type of foe they may be facing. This supplement does provide quite a few creatures that you may use right away. Maybe these creatures are all you need, or they may help spark some creativity for your own creations. Creature stamina is showing the maximum at normal difficulty (using $1d8 \times \text{Level}$).

Along with brand new species, there are the normal creatures we have in our real world century. There are also some creatures from prehistoric times included. Each creature has their statistics along with a brief description. Although levels are optional, I included them to better help you prepare adventures. Each creature also lists the various habitats in which they live.

With exception to the brand new species, the others have some extra information. If you want a world where a normal black bear does not exist, there is an alternate name provided on the upper left in parenthesis.

So instead of running into a black bear, one would encounter a bahtho. They are similar to a black bear except they are covered in orange feathers. Their eyes are also silver in color. They still have the characteristics of a black bear, but will provide your world with a unique looking creature that may have mutated slightly over the centuries. Feel free to use one or the other. Maybe you want both black bears and bahthos roaming the land.
